The Earliest Books of Canterbury Cathedral

Richard Gameson

The Earliest Books of Canterbury Cathedral

ONE OF THE GREATEST literary centres throughout the Middle Ages, Canterbury, still preserves – despite horrendous losses – a significant collection of medieval manuscripts. All its pre-thirteenth-century books are catalogued and discussed for the first time in this book; each is illustrated in colour. Highlights range from the oldest copies of the Alfredian translation of Gregory the Great's Dialogues, and of Lanfranc's gloss on the Epistles, through fine liturgica, to an extraordinarily grand copy of Peter Comestor's Historia scholastica. Clear descriptions are complemented by broad-ranging analyses that explain the significance of these works in general and of the Canterbury copies in particular. A substantial Introduction traces the history of book-production in Kent and Canterbury up to c.1200, the development and use of its collections in the later Middle Ages, and the fate of its books at the Reformation.
